FIELD MARSHAL PRITZ.

We never knew the Marshal's name; He won his title from my mate— Freid Marshal Fritz; from whence he car We didn't care—until too late.

Each day for years, through rain and shi fie used the self-same words and tone, And scarched the rooms along the line— And sadiy turned away alone.

Sometimes he sought the emigrants And piles his easer questions there; But all they gave was pity's giance— Perhaps it kept him from desoair.

We often saked him Lena's age—
"Sixteen." he said, with thoughtful mien:
Old Time had balanced Lena's page—
"To Fritz she never passed sixteen."

We knew, of course, that Fritz was da That's why the boys, it's my belief, At his quaint figure never laughed And always listened to his prief

I think he felt the truth at last;
I'm sure I guessed it by the way
He muttered, as he sighed and passed,
